

THREE JURORS SEATED IN SNOOK TRIAL

ECONOMY PLAN OF HOOVER TO BE BIG FIGHT

President Attempts Saving
Where Others Failed—
Success Doubtful.

WASHINGTON, July 24—In launching a campaign to reduce the cost of national defense, President Hoover today had undertaken a task that brought only defeat to Calvin Coolidge and to virtually every other occupant of the White House since the Civil war.

In setting out to slash army and navy expenditures, Mr. Hoover must win over a hostile congress, which repeatedly has ignored presidential recommendations for "scrimping" in national defense. The president incidentally must achieve his proposed economies in a congress that now has pending a half dozen proposals for increasing expenditures—and in a congress that but recently ordered a naval cruiser building program over presidential opposition.

Republican leaders in the house in which army and navy appropriations originate, frankly expressed doubt over the possibility of success for the president's plan.

HOOVER CRITICIZED

The president meanwhile was subjected to criticism from leaders of both parties from both ends of the capitol. Senator William H. King (D) of Utah, declared military expenditures were far too high but that the president was making a "mere gesture" in turning over the question of economies to army officers themselves. He declared modification of the naval cruiser building program would achieve greater savings to the taxpayers than all the economies the president could obtain in the army.

Resistance to the program was voiced by Rep. Fred A. Britten (R) of Illinois, chairman of the house naval affairs committee. He declared congress demonstrated that the American people desired a strong army and navy by overruling President Coolidge on the program and by ordering the elevation of guns on big battleships over White House opposition.

Administration spokesmen pointed out, however, that a number of economies might be achieved if congress would approve them. They listed:

ECONOMIES LISTED

1.—Suspension of the $274,000, 000 cruiser building program, provided a naval arms limitation pact is adopted.

2.—Decommissioning of naval ships, similar to the giant aircraft carriers Sertoga and Lexington, but provision for keeping them in commission for use in event of war.

3.—Curtailling of the five year aircraft program.

4.—Reduction of activities in the army reserve corps, the national guards of various states.

5.—Reduction of the United States army from 118,000 men to below 100,000 men.

6.—Abandonment of a hundred military posts, deemed obsolete and worthless from a military standpoint.

7.—Abandonment of numerous coast defense forts, deemed obsolete and worthless from a military standpoint.

8.—Curtailling of the army building program if posts and forts are closed.

GROCERY STOCK IS SOLD TO HIS SON

Michael Funk, who operated a grocery store in New Holland, has sold his stock of goods to his son, Wilbur Funk, who operates an I. G. A. store in Circleville. Mr. Funk expects to retire from the grocery business, having sold the building to William Mitchell of New Holland.

The Sunlight Cream station in charge of Mrs. Ada Davis, will hold one part of the store room at present.

TREE HIVES DRAW VAGRANT SWARMS

LANCASTER, July 24—Alfred Hale, farmer of near here, is a new style "keeper of bees."

Last year he placed a number of empty hives in the trees on his place to see whether passing swarms would inhabit the lodgings he offered.

Two swarms did. This summer he placed a dozen hives on the limbs and so far three swarms have accepted this hospitality.

SPURN HARDINGE MILLIONS

Tennessee's hills and Grandma Weems (center) mean more to Troy, Jr., 7 (left) and Norman Weems, 5, than the millions of Franklyn P. Hardinge, the oil burner magnate of Chicago who jilted Ann Livingston. Troy and Norman are sons of Hardinge's present wife by a former marriage, but they refused to leave their Knoxville, Tenn., farm home when the Hardinges sought to take them away. They declined to accept a Chicago home and education at the expense of Hardinge.

Fire Truck Bids Rejected By Board Of Control; Proposal Re-advertised

Prices Too High, City Officials
Decide After 14 Days' Consideration.

Fourteen days after the bids for the new fire truck for Circleville were opened by the board of control, Mayor B. T. Hedges announced Wednesday that the bids had been rejected by the board and that the proposal will be re-advertised. The new bids will be opened August 8.

The bids were too high and it is believed that a second bidding will produce more competition among the three firms which are high in the first bidding, Mayor Hedges said.

The Seagrave Corporation, Columbus; the Ahrens-Fox Fire Engine Co., Cincinnati; and the American La France and Foamite Industries, New York, each bid $12,500 on a 750 gallon pumper and $13,000 on a 1000 gallon pumper. The other bidders were the Buffalo Fire Appliance Corporation, Buffalo, N. Y., with a $8,750 bid on a 750 gallon pumper, and the Boyer Fire Apparatus Co., of Logansport, Ind., with a $10,250 bid on a 750 gallon pumper and $11,250 on the 1000 gallon pumper.

Only the bids of the three high-bidders received serious consideration and as a 1000 gallon pumper is favored, the $13,000 bids would leave no money to meet the interest on the $13,000 bond issue, which the issue must provide.

The second advertising for the bids does not include the specifications for extra equipment which were made by fire Chief Palmer Wise. At a conference between the board of control and city council members last week, it was revealed that 10 recommendations

MISS SEALOCK DIES OF TUBERCULOSIS

Miss Josephine Sealock, 30, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Sealock, died Tuesday at her home in Orient from tuberculosis. She also is survived by three brothers, Glenn, Lawrence and James Sealock Jr., and a sister, Sara Sealock.

Funeral services will be held at 3:30 p. m. Thursday in Orient M. E. church. Burial will be in Mt. Sterling cemetery.

ESCAPE REPORTED

Circleville police department has received word from the Boy's Industrial School that John Kuzma, 13, had escaped and was headed toward Circleville. At the time of his escape he was wearing his school uniform.

LAMBERT FIELD, St. Louis, July 24—In bald contradiction of the long respected theory that "what goes up must come down" the endurance monoplane "St. Louis Robin," which soared into the air on the sunny morning of Saturday, July 13, showed not the slightest disposition to come down this morning as it entered its 12th day of consecutive flying.

As the sturdy monoplane, which at 11:17 had added 22 hours of flying to the world record formerly held by the "Angeleno," cruised into its 269 consecutive hour of flying it began to look as though the jocular "see you Christmas" message by one of the pilots was not so utterly fantastic after all.

A crowd estimated at 50,000 was at the field last night to witness the fireworks demonstration prepared to celebrate the achievement of the "St. Louis Robin" in breaking the world record.

Dale Jackson and Forrest O'Brine, the two pilots, are now receiving $2,648 a day for every day they continue to stay in the air. The Curtiss-Robertson Co. is paying them $100 an hour for every hour over the record. They are receiving money also from other sources.

OFFICERS RENAMED BY LOCAL CHURCH

At the quarterly conference of the Methodist Episcopal church Tuesday night, virtually the same officers were re-elected to fill the positions on the board of trustees and for the stewards of the church. Routine business was discussed, and new business introduced.

The Rev. J. W. Blair, district superintendent from Chillicothe had charge of the meeting. Rev. Blair presides over the business meetings of 100 churches in four different counties.

36 CHILDREN IN COUNTY'S HOME

According to Lowell Brown, probation officer, there are 36 children in the Children's Home. Among these 36, there are 10 cases of measles and all are reported as getting along fine.

Twenty-two have been placed in good homes by the probation officers during their terms since the children's home was built. There has only been one death recorded in the history of the home.

Soviet-China Clash Nearer

Since the breaking of diplomatic relations between Soviet Russia and the Chinese Nationalist Government, clashes between troops on the eastern Chinese border have been reported. Many thousands of Chinese troops, like those above, have been ordered to the Manchurian districts on the Amur River. Russia alleges that China failed within time limit to reply to the ultimatum sent in protest against seizure of the Chinese Eastern Railway and the arrest of the Soviet officials. China says the reply was on time but delay was due to translation.

China and Russia Blame Each Other As Peace Envoys Seek To Avoid War

Hostilities Mark Time As Arbitration Conference Is Sought.

By International News Service
The Far East crisis, directly involving China and the union of Socialist Soviet Republics (Russia), marked time today while the international diplomats continued their labors for an arbitration conference to compose the conflict peacefully.

Both China and Soviet-Russia have conditionally promised to accept arbitration of the Chinese eastern railway dispute and other pending problems.

The Soviet ambassador to France conferred with French Foreign Minister Briand, after which he informed International News Service: "The Soviets are peaceful; only refusal by China to accept pacific measures will be responsible for further action."

Mukden, Manchuria, advises to London said that the council of the northeastern provincial Chinese governments place the blame for the Manchurian imbroglio directly upon the Soviets.

On the other hand there is a disposition in official circles in London, based upon reports from Peking, to believe that the Chinese acted too hastily in seizing the Chinese eastern railway.

The weekly meeting of the Circleville Rotary club will be held at the Pickaway Country club on Thursday. The affair will start in the afternoon with golf for all Rotarians. Every member is expected to be present to enjoy the occasion.

President Mocker Terwilliger has offered the information that every member is to try his hand at golf and those who fail to take advantage of the opportunity might be called upon to caddy for those who play.

There will be plenty of clubs for non-members of the Country club, and the excuse of having no sticks will not suffice.

At 6:30 o'clock, Fred Wilbur, the new club caterer, will serve a chicken dinner and special service will be given those who are hungry from the exertion of the golf game. All Rotarians are requested to be out at the club as soon as possible in the afternoon so that there will be plenty of time to enjoy golf.

COURT ROOM, COLUMBUS, OHIO, July 24—In a court room thronged with women and girl spectators, Dr. James H. Snook, 49, former Ohio State University professor, went on trial today for the murder of Miss Theora K. Hix, his 24-year-old co-ed paramour.

The case of "The People versus Dr. Snook" was formally called at 9:03 a. m. before Judge Henry L. Scarlett, in criminal court.

Seventy-five prospective jurors, including sixteen women, were summoned to the court room and the roll was called to see if all were on hand.

Dr. Snook, attired in a gray business suit, and lavender tie, was brought across the "bridge of sighs" from the county jail. He sat complacently with his attorneys as court proceedings got under way.

Facing Dr. Snook, as he glanced over the crowded court room, sat Mr. and Mrs. Melvin T. Hix, of Bradenton, Fla., parents of the slain girl.

Hix's face darkened and his jaws set as he glanced at Snook. Hix himself is an educator, having for years been a principal in New York City. He is a gray-haired, be-spectacled man of 64.

But Snook did not see Hix, apparently.

The defendant's gaze quickly swept the court room and then, for long periods, he stared straight ahead as if in a daze.

Mrs. Hix, a quiet, motherly-looking little woman, sat beside her husband, her head bowed. It was warm in the courtroom and an attendant gave her a fan.

Judge Scarlett, before dismissing the prospective jurors collectively, warned them not to discuss the case with anyone and not to read the newspapers.

"This case has received a great deal of publicity," said the judge, "and there may be some difficulty in getting a jury. It must be tried solely on the testimony of sworn witnesses and without bias or prejudice. You cannot be accepted as a juror unless you can lay aside any pre-conceived impressions of this case."

The task of selecting the jury was then begun.

The first prospective juror called was Miss Edith Dysinger, a graduate nurse.

"Have you any scruples against the death penalty?" asked Prosecuting Attorney John J. Chester, Jr.

"I have not," she replied.

She was not acquainted with Dr. Snook. She knew none of the attorneys involved in the case. She had "formed an opinion" on the case from newspaper accounts but she felt she could disregard this opinion and try the case on the sworn testimony.

Questioned by Defense Attorney John F. Seidel, Miss Dysinger said she never had served on a jury.

"You have an opinion as to the guilt or innocence of the defendant," said Seidel. "Is that opinion fixed?"

"It could be changed by the testimony," she replied.

"Have you discussed this case?" "Yes, several times, in my home."

In reply to questions from Judge Scarlett, she said she felt she "could lay aside all prejudice."

QUizzED ON INSANITY
The first indication that insanity would be the defense of Snook, came when Attorney Seidel asked Miss Dysinger this question:

"Have you any prejudice against the defendant pleading insanity at the time of the commission of the crime?"

"No, I have not."

"Have you read any books that would disclose to you what constitutes the difference between legal and medical insanity?"

She said that, as a nurse, she had treated about 35 cases of insanity at Soldiers' hospital, Marion, Ind. She had not, however, ever discussed the question of legal and medical insanity with physicians.

SEATED AS JUROR NO. 1
Miss Dysinger was tentatively accepted as juror number one. She is a stout, middle-aged woman, wearing spectacles. She took her seat in the jury box.

The most interested spectator in the courtroom seemed to be the elderly, silver-haired Mr. Hix. Attired entirely in black, he leaned forward, his hand cupped to his ears, listening to every word of the examination of talesmen.

Whenever his eyes rested on Dr. Snook, he glowered but the defendant did not seem to see him.

He is a tall man, getting a little heavy. He is quite bald and his nose glasses give him a somewhat intellectual appearance. He fingered a gold lead pencil. Apparently giving no particular at-

BRITAIN GIVES AID TO PERSIA

English Military Plans Reported To Have Bombed
Band of Rebels.

LONDON, July 24—(INS)—The confirmation was available here today of reports that British military planes, co-operating with Persian government troops, have bombed a large band of rebels in South Persia.

The rebels, the reports declare, resent the attempts of Riza Khan, Persia's ruler, to westernize the country. It is reported that 1,000 Persian troops have been killed in the fighting.

The war office and the air ministry declare they have no word from the near east to confirm or deny the reports.

The rumored uprising recalls the events which followed the attempts of King Amanullah of Afghanistan to exert a westernizing influence upon his tribesmen.

After weeks of smoldering resentment over their ruler's occultism, Afghan rebels, under the leadership of Bachai-Sachao, deposed Amanullah and a few days later also forced into exile his brother, Inayatullah, who ascended the throne when Amanullah abdicated.

Eastern rulers have been tempted to attempt westernization of their kingdoms by the success of Kemal Pasha, the great Turkish leader.

Coolidge Returns To Wash-

Outlawing War.

WASHINGTON, July 24—Calvin Coolidge returned to Washington this morning for the first time since he relinquished the reins of office as president on March 4. He returned to witness the proclaiming of the Kellogg-Briand treaty outlawing war which was conceived under his direction.

The short four and a half months of his absence seemingly had served to make the good people of the nation's capital forget their erstwhile chief executive. When the federal express, which brought Mr. Coolidge from Northampton, rolled into Union station at 7:05 o'clock this morning there wasn't the slightest vestige of the crowds of old that used to turn out to greet him.

The former president stood waiting in the vestibule of the last Pullman in the train as it crept under the train shed. His left hand and wrist were rather heavily bandaged, and this fact immediately drew comment from the little group that waited to greet him.

"Oh," he explained smilingly, "I fell down while fishing and hurt it, but it's almost well now."

The task of selecting the jury was then begun.

The first prospective juror called was Miss Edith Dyingser, a graduate nurse.

"Have you any scruples against the death penalty?" asked Prosecuting Attorney John J. Chester, Jr.

"I have not," she replied.

She was not acquainted with Dr. Snook. She knew none of the attorneys involved in the case. She had "formed an opinion" on the case from newspaper accounts but she felt she could disregard this opinion and try the case on the sworn testimony.

He is a tall man, getting a little heavy. He is quite bald and his nose glasses give him a somewhat intellectual appearance. He fingered a gold lead pencil. Apparently giving no particular at-

Three talesmen were quickly excused because they were opposed to capital punishment.

"GIRLS IN MAJORITY"
The judge then declared a 15-minute recess.

Young girls attired in bright summery finery made up a majority of the spectators who jammed every inch of the hot courtroom. Nine-tenths of the spectators were women and girls.

In the corridors five bailiffs were kept busy keeping a throng of women and a sprinkling of men from breaking through the "deadline."

Examination of talesmen continued when court was again called to order. Ralph W. Upham, an electrician, was rejected because he had "a fixed opinion."

Robert E. Codner, a clerk, was excused for the same reason.

"ANOTHER WOMAN SEATED"
The second tentatively selected juror was also a woman, Mrs. Leona F. Biven, a middle-aged housewife.

She had read very little of the Snook case, being out of town traveling with her husband when the crime was committed. She had no fixed opinion regarding his guilt or innocence. She had served on two juries in criminal cases.

"Do you feel you can give this defendant a fair and impartial trial?" she was asked by defense counsel.

"I do," she replied.

BRITAIN GIVES AID TO PERSIA

English Military Planes Reported To Have Bombed
Band of Rebels.

LONDON, July 24—(INS)—No confirmation was available here today of reports that British military planes, co-operating with Persian government troops, have bombed a large band of rebels in South Persia.

The rebels, the reports declare, resent the attempts of Riza Khan, Persia's ruler, to westernize the country. It is reported that 1,000 Persian troops have been killed in the fighting.

The war office and the air ministry declare they have no word from the the near east to confirm or deny the reports.

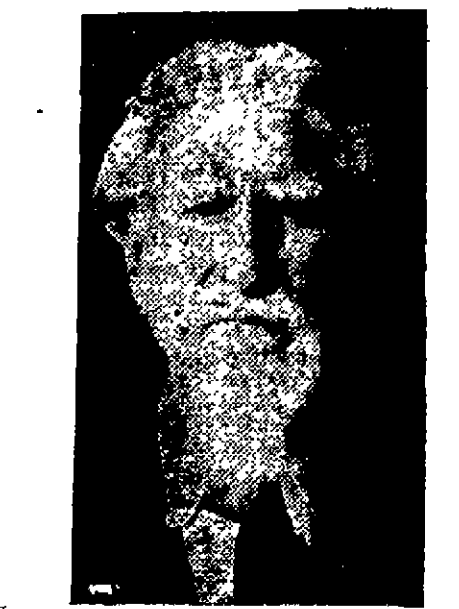

The rumored uprising recalls the events which followed the attempts of King Amanullah of Afghanistan to exert a westernizing influence upon his tribesmen. After weeks of smouldering resentment over their ruler's occidentalism, Afghan rebels, under the leadership of Bachai-Sachao, deposed Amanullah and a few days later also forced into exile his brother, Inayatullah, who ascended the throne when Amanullah abdicated.

Eastern rulers have been inspired to attempt westernization of their kingdoms by the success of Kemal Pasha, the great Turkish leader.

"GOOD-BYE RHEUMATISM!" SAYS CIVIL WAR VETERAN

Rheumatic Pains Dating Back To Civil War Banished By Spinago Says Isaac Grabill.

Sixty-five years of suffering from rheumatism, misery from the time of the Civil War up to a few short months ago and then, pain banished, rheumatism driven away by three bottles of Spinago. That is the record of this new tonic containing spinach in the case of Isaac Grabill, ninety-year-old Civil War veteran residing between Circleville and Chillicothe on Rural Route No. 6.

ISAAC GRABILL.

Is it surprising that Mr. Grabill will be thankful for the rest of his life to Spinago? Is it surprising that countless hundreds of former rheumatic sufferers daily call at The Mykrantz Pharmacy, 107 N. Court St. to gratefully recount the benefits of this super medicine in their cases? No, it is not surprising when such cases as Mr. Grabill's are on record. And his is not the only one. Spinago makes no idle promises; it goes to work and quickly, quietly and efficiently attacks the causes of rheumatism at the root, driving it from the body all rheumatic pain and torture. Thousands of residents in this vicinity have learned the powers of Spinago and are thankful for their regained health and well-being.

Mr. Grabill speaks as follows: "Spinago has driven away pain and suffering from rheumatism which had been with me since the close of the Civil War. Medicine after medicine I tried but no success. Finally I started on the Spinago treatment with miraculous results. Gone are all rheumatic pains, gone are my indigestion and constipation troubles. And I have Spinago to thank for all this. I can truthfully say that, at ninety years of age, I owe my health to this tonic."

Constipation, indigestion, dyspepsia, stomach, bowel and liver ailments, nervousness and lack of energy as well as rheumatism simply cannot withstand the powerful action of this medicine which contains as its most important ingredient that most valuable of foods, Spinago.

Spinago is sold and guaranteed by The Mykrantz Pharmacy, 107 N. Court St., and by all other good druggists in this vicinity.—Adv.

Immigration Restriction

Until 1819 no law was passed in congress which effected the immigrant. An act then adopted, though applying to all passengers, was in reality a law regulating immigration, because then nearly all passengers were immigrants.

The Brighter Side

ALEXANDER TO BE GREAT AID TO M'KECHNIE

Veteran Card Hurler Returns To Form When New Pilot Takes Helm.

NEW YORK, July 24.—When Bill McKechnie resumes his managerial duties in St. Louis today he will find his task of jacking up the fading champions made easier by the return to form of Grover Cleveland Alexander, his right bower in other pennant campaigns.

The grand old man of baseball showed all of his old time skill in pitching the Cardinals to an 8 to 2 win over the Phillies yesterday. Although nicked for ten hits, he struck out seven batters and did not walk a man.

The cubs advanced to within a single point of the Pirates by blanking the Giants, 2 to 0, while the league leaders were dropping a 10 to 7 slugfest to Brooklyn. In the seventh inning Pitcher Hill of the Pirates filled the bases by intentionally walking Bissonette, a .226 hitter, to get at Billy Riel. The Youngstown, Ohio, recruit lacing the ball over the left field fence, breaking up the party.

PITCHING DUEL

Root and "No Hit" Hibbell staged a pretty pitching duel in the New York-Chicago game, each allowing only four hits. The Cubs converted doubles by English and Grimm into runs.

Cincinnati shattered Boston's winning streak by annexing the first game of a double bill, 9 to 5, but Delaney whitewashed the Reds in the nightcap, 6 to 0.

In the American league the Yankees inaugurated their home stand with a 7 to 5 triumph over Detroit, thanks to the wildness of Earl Whitehill, who passed nine men. Pipgras pitched for New York.

YANKIES CUT LEAD

The Yanks cut Philadelphia's lead to ten games, as the Macks were set down by Wes Ferrell of Cleveland, 9 to 3, after Rube Walberg had gained a 4 to 1 decision over Wilks Hudlin in the first game.

In the nightcap the Indians knocked out Jack Quinn in the ninth inning when they piled up Mack's mighty farmer boy, duplicated his record-breaking feat of last season by driving a ball clear over the roof of the left field stands.

The fast-stepping White Sox nosed out Washington, 3 to 2, and the Browns, although outbatted by thirteen hits to twelve, bunched their blows to down the Red Sox by an 11 to 4 count.

EVELAND TEAM QUILTS LEAGUE

Deputy Sheriff Ward Organizes Outfit To Take Place of Grocery Players.

Blow-ups, resignations, reapointments and what have you has taken place in the recreation ball league for the past few days. The Eveland Nine under the management of John Rhoades and Charlie Scott has withdrawn from the league. No reason was given for the resignation. Deputy Sheriff "Doggy" Ward has now organized a team which will fill the vacancy left by the grocers. The name of the new team will be "Doggy Ward's Ten."

All the former players of Eveland's Nine have been signed up with the new team with the exception of Charlie Scott who will now play with the Ohio Utilities. Mr. Ward says that his men promise a real showing and they hope to be at the top in a week's time.

FOUR ILLS ARE SWEEPED AWAY BY MODERN KONJOLA

Former Sufferer Found First and Only Relief In Modern Compound.

MR. FRANK DENTON.

"I had stomach and kidney troubles, and rheumatism and neuritis," said Mr. Frank Denton, 19 Morrison street, Ashtabula, Ohio. "I suffered such terrible agonies after eating that my meals were no longer a source of enjoyment. Weak kidneys caused extreme pains across my back and rheumatism effected every part of my body."

"Just three bottles of Konjola made a new man of me. My friends marvel at my activity and appearance and ask me what in the world I have been taking to make me look so well. You can bet that I tell them that Konjola deserves all the credit. I do not wonder that this remedy is called the master medicine with a million friends."

Konjola is sold in Circleville, O., at Hamilton & Ryan's drug store, and by all the best druggists throughout this entire section.—Adv.

Lutheran Brotherhood vs Doggie Ward's Ten at Utilities Park.
C. A. C. vs Pettit Tires at the Commons on E. Corwin-st.

The Coca Colas scored their ninth victory Tuesday evening when they defeated the Ohio Utilities 7 to 2. This game was won in the first inning when the bottlers scored five runs. It can be said that two errors in the outfield can account for at least three of these runs.

After the first inning the bottlers were only allowed to score two runs and thus was in the second inning The Ohio Utilities seem to be failing and unless they be on the watch they will find themselves in fourth place. Barnes for the bottlers and Willoughby for the electricians made some very beautiful catches in the outfield. Maloney and Davis also pitched a very good game. Merriman and Weller did some hard hitting.

TRANSPORTS WINS

In one of the closest and hardest fought games of the season in recreation baseball, the Motor

Transports triumphed over the Circleville Merchants by the close score of 1 to 0. Ten innings had to be played in order to reach a verdict. Oliver for the Transports was responsible for the lone run that was scored. Both teams played a fine defense. The Motor Transports are still marching forward and are determined to get to the front.

LION-HEADED SPHINKES TO GUARD EMBASSY

Two mysterious looking beasts, part lion and part sphinx, have been slowly taking shape and form under the sculptor's chisel at Bedford, Ind.

Now the secret is out. The great stone figures are to mount guard at the portals of the new British embassy under construction in Washington. Sir Edwin Lutyens is the architect.

Out of a single block of stone the two massive figures were carved, according to officers of the Indiana Limestone company. The block was moved from quarry to the sculpturing hall, where so many artistic designs for outstanding buildings are carved, and sculptors were busy on the pieces for several weeks.

"A glance at these solemn creatures convinces one that twisting the tail of the British lion is no pleasant job," laughed one architect as the figures were being packed for shipment.

First Love Still Holds

Not many actresses get the chance to turn down the figures on the contract which was offered Ethel Barrymore to appear in a talkie movie. She said she did not like her first appearance in the silent films some years ago and thinks the talkies are terrible, although film experts say that her voice is ideal. She'll stick to her first love—the stage.

SHIFTY SEYMOUR TO FIGHT KID WAGNER

Thursday evening at Scippo park fight fans will again have the opportunity of seeing Eddie Kid Wagner in action, when he meets Shifty Seymour.

Both of these boys are known as good mixers and as fans well remember that last week Seymour kayoed Kid Ross in 25 seconds. He plans to do likewise to Wagner. Wagner declares he'll reply to Seymour Thursday evening and fans who want to see some real honest-to-goodness fighting want to be there.

Plenty of good, clean entertainment is on tap for fight fans at Scippo Thursday evening and they will sure miss something worth seeing if they stay away.

There are 12 rounds of fast action and as these fighters are getting more on an edge to go, it is hard to keep them apart before the battle.

LION-HEADED SPHINXES TO GUARD EMBASSY

"DON'T TWIST MY TAIL!"

Two mysterious looking beasts, part lion and part sphinx, have been slowly taking shape and form under the sculptor's chisel at Bedford, Ind.

Now the secret is out. The great stone figures are to mount guard at the portals of the new British embassy under construction in Washington. Sir Edwin Lutyens is the architect.

Out of a single block of stone the two massive figures were carved, according to officers of the Indiana Limestone company. The block was moved from quarry to the sculpturing hall, where so many artistic designs for outstanding buildings are carved, and sculptors were busy on the pieces for several weeks.

"A glance at these solemn creatures convinces one that twisting the tail of the British lion is no pleasant job," laughed one architect as the figures were being packed for shipment.

LAST OF THE LOG DRIVES

The tide of empire, according to the old proverb, has been pushing its way westward for a good many years. Here and there it has left a short stretch of frontier behind, surrounded by modern complexity. But these spots are fast vanishing. Year by year they grow fewer. New York and Detroit are altogether too much for them.

The last of the great white pine log drives is now being finished in the upper peninsula of Michigan. Nearly 2,500,000 feet of logs are coming down the Manistiquette river; when the drive is finished, lumbermen say Michigan will have seen the last of the really large-scale affairs of that kind.

Thus another lost bit of the old frontier inconspicuously preserved in as up-to-date a state as Michigan, passes on. For the old-time lumber jack and his log drives were things of the frontier, as far as Michigan was concerned, when Michigan was one vast wilderness, and they are coming to an end because that wilderness has vanished, giving way to farms, manufacturing towns, railroads, paved roads and golf courses.

It was 'way back in 1832 that Michigan's logging days started. Someone built a sawmill at Saginaw in that year, and from that moment the axes of the lumber jacks were constantly flashing and ringing. Gangs of men worked month after month, heaping tremendous piles of odorous new logs by the river bank; then in the spring, when melted snows gave the river added power, the logs were tumbled in and floated down to the mills—floated down with busy lumber jacks along to make the wild river behave itself, floated down to the tune of danger and hardships and endurance and death.

Epic stories came out of this strange, picturesque industry. Timber kings were made over night, hauling grotesque mansions in isolated mill towns. The lumber jack became famous—famous for his deeds of strength and courage, famous for his wild, uncontrollable spree with which he celebrated the ending of each drive, famous for his fights and for the liquor he could drink.

And Michigan's forests disappeared. By 1900 the lower peninsula was about cleared. Ten years later the bulk of the big operations in the upper peninsula were finished. There are still logging camps there, to be sure; but the great days are ended. The Manistiquette river is floating down its last big drive. After this the story will be just about closed.

America still produces timber, of course. But the big forests now are far to the west. The tide of empire is moving toward the setting sun, pushing the frontier ahead of it. What Oregon and Washington are now, Michigan was three decades ago—and what Michigan is now, Oregon and Washington will be in a few more years. The lumber jack, riding downstream on a shifting carpet of swaying logs on his way to join the cowboy and the old-time tailor.

Dr. Vinci, Man of Science

The spiral spring hinge that shuts your screen door was invented by Leonardo da Vinci, the Fifteenth century painter, whose "La Belle Ferocendore" was the subject of an extended lawsuit. Leonardo's fame as a painter has obscured his reputation as an inventor and a trail blazer of science. Yet he stated scientific laws that four centuries of experiment have not altered and many of his simplest inventions have become part of our daily lives. He devised the wheelbarrow, the rotating smokestack that turns with the wind, and the flexible roller chain used on bicycle sprockets. Edwin W. Teale in Popular Science Monthly.

FIVE TYPES OF WOMEN SHOWN

Interesting Character Portrayal Feature of "The Squall" At Cliftona.

INSIDE 5—TYPES THEATRES

Five women of entirely different types are delineated in the First National picture "The Squall," showing at the Cliftona Theatre Wednesday and Thursday.

These characters are portrayed by Alice Joyce, Myrna Loy, Loretta Young, Zasu Pitts and Marcia Harris. Miss Joyce enacts the restrained and tender role of Maria Lajos, the wife and mother whose husband and son are almost taken from her by Nubi, the gypsy maid played by Myrna Loy, savage incorrigible girl-nomad who chances upon the Lajos household in the same manner that a squall crashes upon a peaceful countryside.

Loretta Young is the naive and sweet Irma, loving a college boy and believing that evil does not exist in the world; Zasu Pitts as Lena, the maid-servant, has given her simple heart in love to the man-servant. The fifth woman in the cast is Marcia Harris, who as Ana, depicts a human talking machine, constantly cackling, gossiping and chattering wherever she goes. The balance of the cast includes Richard Tucker, Carroll Nye, Harry Cording, Knute Erickson, Nicholas Soussanin and George Hackathorne.

BENEFIT AGAIN TONIGHT

"His Lucky Day," a splendid comedy starring Reginald Denny, Otis Harlan and LeRayne Duval, is showing at the Grand theater tonight under the auspices of the Business and Professional Women's club of Circleville. "His Lucky Day" shows Denny as a real estate man who has a hard time trying to find suitable neighbors for the father of the girl he loves or loses his job.

A Fox news reel is also on the program.

SCENIC EFFECTS GREAT

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, in arrangement with A. L. Erlanger, Charles Dillingham and F. Ziegfeld, Jr., offers the world's mightiest attraction at the Metropolitan theatre in the celebrated picture version of "Ben-Hur," to which all New York has crowded for many months and which equally delighted Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia in as many record-breaking runs. This wonderful picture cost $4,000,000, three years' time and the labors of 150,000 persons in Italy and California.

The details of General Lew Wallace's famous "Tale of the Christ" have been reverently followed. Not only that, the picture heightens the powerful melodramatic and love interest of the play, centering in the four romantic characters of Ben-Hur, Messala, Esther and Iras, enacted by Ramon Novarro, Francis X. Bushman, May McAvoy and Carmel Myers.

Stars Are to Blame

The word influenza has an astronomical origin, according to a writer in London Answers. It perpetuates one of the earliest guesses at the origin of the disease—that of the Italians, who blamed the "influence" of the stars for the Seventeenth century epidemic.

We are still uncertain as to the causes of flu, though we no longer look for them in the stars. The uncertainty is natural enough, so baffling are some of the influenza epidemics. For instance, that of 1859 started simultaneously in Central Asia, Greenland and Northwest Canada—places thousands of miles apart—and then spread all over the world.

STEP ON IT

Daphne by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

CHAPTER LXV.

AT that moment Crystal's worldly possessions were at their lowest ebb, she had even sold some of her clothes to get a little ready money—but such as they were, she would have given them all for another chance at Ralph.

Gideon Cocklebur, from the prodigal spender, had turned into the cautious lover, over night. His wife—Crystal couldn't forgive her self for not having made sure about that sooner—returned unexpectedly from a two year's sojourn in Moscow. Instantly Cocklebur's whole manner changed. His little fiction about platonic affection for the beautiful little girl from the country vanished. His whole-sale invitations to dinners and shows also stopped. There were several weeks when Crystal hardly saw him at all.

"Oh, if I only had someone to advise me!" she mourned, pacing back and forth in the narrow space of the bizarre studio apartment she had come to hate. "If only Mama was like other mothers! The right kind of a mother can do everything for a girl. You need background. If I had a decent background he wouldn't dare treat me like that! But when a man finds a girl all alone in town, with out any people of her own, of course, he thinks he can do anything! It's all mama's fault. If she had managed right we'd be rich."

"We ought to be living on the orchard property yet, with house parties, and wonderful men visiting, and we could if she hadn't got Haines to squander everything. Then I'd show them—I'd show them the kind of match I could make! But here, all by myself what chance have I got?"

What chance indeed, with a stack of bills a foot high, and collectors banging on the door at all hours?

She made it her business to see Mrs. Cocklebur, though it meant hours of patient waiting in the lobby of the hotel. At last she saw them together, fat Gideon looking yellow and more like a garden slug than ever, and a tall, very masculine looking woman with horn rimmed glasses, and commonsense shoes.

"It ought to be easy to get him to divorce that!" she decided, and she patted his little fat hand, and gazed soulfully into his little zig eyes, while he told her how unhappy his married life had been, and how his wife, who was interested in nothing but politics and temperance, never understood him.

"That's why you mean so much to me, my dear," he said. "You know how I am, beauty loving. All for the nice things in life. One little evening with you, my dear, means more to me than I can tell you."

"But, darling, you never take me out any more!"

"Why, only last night we had dinner—"

"Yes; at that old chop house, I mean not anywhere nice Gideon—"

"But, my dear, I couldn't compromise you by taking you to public places where we would be recognized!"

"Aren't you afraid of compromising me by staying here then?"

But try as she might, she could not get the best of him in an argument, and she couldn't get him to consider an immediate divorce.

"Some day, when I'm free," he would say, but it was always "some day"—never now.

She gathered that it was Mrs. Cocklebur who had the money, and was again holding the purse strings, for since her return his generous gifts ceased. For once in her life Crystal was completely outwitted.

If it had been only Cocklebur, it wouldn't have been so bad. But Avery Woodward was gone and even Ralph who had seemed so safe, was slipping away.

"I'm unlucky, I am!" she would tell herself, staring into the mirror, with gloomy, critical eyes. "It isn't my fault. What chance has a girl all alone, without any money or anything? If Mama hadn't hadn't been so damn selfish, I might have had a chance."

"If she'd take my advice and get a good rooming house she might make good yet—but she won't."

That was another thing to worry about. Adelina's letters which no longer came on black bordered paper, were filled with accounts of conquests and beauty treatments.

"A certain realtor here admires me very much. Of course, being a young man, and me so recently widowed, he has not made any offer yet. He was wonderful to me at the Whist Tournament. I wore my pink crepe-backed satin, and had a paper curl and a special facial at the Wonder Beauty Salon. You ought to try the new Sunshine and Roses skin-food they put out."

Sometimes Crystal threw the letter into the wastebasket unread. Adelina's complacent faith in her ability to get another husband was sickening. "Imagine her—at her age. She ought to salt down her money, and get to work. She needn't think she can come and sponge on me when she's broke!"

There were even times—though they didn't come very often—when Crystal thought seriously of herself getting work. Just what she didn't know. Selling antiques in an art shop perhaps. Or some sort of stage work. . . . But it was all very indefinite, and difficult, and she never thought about it very long.

When she got worried and despondent over money matters she usually took a hot bath with plenty of perfumed bath salts, and went to bed and slept. A love story and a box of chocolates helped, too. Curled up on the chaise longue in a kimono she could read and yawn, and nibble by the hour—forgetful of the bills.

So it was a real surprise to her when the long-suffering apartment house manager told her she would have to pay or get out.

"Of course," she said. "I'll have it for you in a day or two. I've been a little short. But I have money coming—"

He eyed her morosely. "You're two months behind, Miss Garroty. Rent is supposed to be paid in advance. I'll have to have it by tomorrow night or—"

"Or what?" she demanded coldly. The man twisted a diamond ring on his finger. He was really sorry for Crystal, but business is business.

"Well, I can't keep anyone in here who can't pay," he said. "I could rent this place tomorrow for ten more than I'm getting. It's quite a place for a young lady alone to keep up."

"er, why don't you move, and get a less expensive place?"

A less expensive place! Crystal seethed over the idea long after he had gone. What did he take her for? Did he think she would live in one of those two by four holes with a wall bed and a kitchenette?

She went back to the mirror, and began to make up. Slowly, carefully, stopping every few minutes to scrutinize the results. Her profile vaguely worried her . . . that fullness under the chin . . . not a double chin, of course. "I'll have to get an astringent," she decided. "What was that tissue cream Mama said was good?"

Her spirits rose as she darkened her long blond lashes, and reddened the cupid-bow of her mouth. The rent was forgotten. "A pretty girl doesn't have to worry," she thought. "Something will turn up!"

Just what happened between John Greely and Ralph McKevitt on that memorable Monday morning after Allan Winter's innocence was established, was something Daphne never knew. They were closeted together for hours in the old man's private office.

He sent for her finally, and she came in with pencil and notebook, trying to breathe naturally, and biting her lower lip to stop its absurd trembling.

The old man looked at her curiously from under his shaggy, overhanging brows. "You don't look well, my dear."

At the "my dear," Ralph flushed uncomfortably, and shifted his position. Daphne did not see the sneer that twisted his haggard mouth, but the old man did, and smiled. He was dangerously quiet and polite. "Did you say something, Ralph?"

McKevitt shot him a look of absolute hate from his harassed, bloodshot eyes. "No," he said as insolently as he dared. "I have nothing to say. You've made that clear."

"Mm, that's good," Greely mumbled. "Nothing like understanding each other. A little late, but better late than never. As I was saying, Daphne, you don't look well."

"I'm quite well, thank you," she said quite steadily.

"Ralph tells me you are going to be married," he went on, mildly, his shrewd eyes never leaving her face. "He says it is an affair of long standing. Is that right, Daphne?"

She looked at Ralph for help, but he sat staring at the floor, his chalky face devoid of all expression.

"Why didn't you tell me before?" the old man persisted. "I might have done something to—er—make the path of true love smoother. As it is, it is . . . Mm . . . going to be rough."

When it was evident that Daphne was incapable of speech the young man burst out angrily: "Of course it is right! You don't have to ask her! She gave me her word. Long ago! Call me a liar if you want to, but it's true!"

Greely ignored him. "Would it make a difference to know that he's only a salaried man—a small salaried man?"

"Two hundred and fifty to start," Ralph put in hastily. "You may as well know the worst. I told Greely we couldn't live on that!"

The worst! Daphne stifled an hysterical desire to laugh. As if being poor would matter! As if Ralph's future success or failure could make any difference—after the thing he had done.

"You'll probably have to keep your job," he went on. "I can't support you on two hundred and fifty."

"But you don't have to marry me," she cried. Her whole being was suddenly transformed. Her dull eyes lit up with hope, her sagging back-bone stiffened. "Whatever made you think you did? Why, Ralph, I don't want to get married!"

BUSY DAYS AHEAD

The Ohio State Fair Grounds present a busy scene these days. Buildings are being roofed, repairs made, big water-mains are being laid, and comfort stations erected. Director Perry L. Green and Assistant Director C. E. Rowland are pursuing a program of restoring the grounds and buildings to safe, sanitary and attractive appearance, rather than using the appropriation for new buildings. Penitentiary prisoners are being used in the work wherever possible. Every effort is to be used during the big annual gathering, August 26-31, to overcome disagreeable features, and to promote comfort and convenience, say the managers. One such project is to divert traffic from certain of the main highways to the north gates of the grounds, to reduce the congestion at the main gates. This is to be done by a system of markers along Columbus streets, in cooperation with the city authorities. A notable list of 12 special attractions have been contracted. There are to be seven bands, headed by the great recording and broadcasting Armo Band of Middletown, and the ALL-OHIO Boys' band, 300 strong, recruited from all the counties of the state. RAILROADS WIN

The Ohio Department of Agriculture has been advised that an opinion, in a case filed to set a precedent, has been handed down by the Utilities Commission ruling that livestock shippers cannot claim overcharges on shipments of different kinds of animals where the railroad demands a numerous rate despite the fact that the total weight of the livestock does not reach that figure. The National Livestock Co., Cleveland, filed a claim before the commission against the Big Four Railroad, setting for that it shipped calves, hogs and sheep in double deck cars, the stock weight being 20,360 pounds. It was the railroad's contention that since the minimum weight for charging was 24,000 pounds 1 calves 22,000 for hogs and 18,000 for sheep, the shipper could not claim overcharges by asserting that the charges should be based on combined actual weight. The charge only amounted to $8, but the case was set forth as an instance which could be used as precedent. The commission dismissed the claim, holding that shippers must conform to the railroad's tariff of minimum rates.

BIG GAME HUNTERS

Nearly every year since 1900 John W. Thompson, chief of the Fish and Game Division has trekked to the big woods for a two weeks big game hunt. He has hunted in Montana, Michigan, Wisconsin, Maine and Canada, a has numerous mounted animals and heads in evidence of his progress. Some of these are on display in his private office in the capitol annex. Among these was a ferocious 300 pound black bear, cleverly mounted a standing guard on the office floor. Mr. Thompson shot this bear on Maine mountain peak several seasons ago, after tracking it for five weeks through the snow. The Chief is looking forward to two weeks of hunting this fall from a permanent camp in Maine. Assistant Chief Van Voorhis is also a veteran big game hunter and fisherman. He has bagged deer, Pennsylvania, moose in Nova Scotia and fished widely in Michigan and Canada. Sportsmen throughout the state are coming to believe that fish and game interests in Ohio have at last fallen under the guidance of men of vision and experience.

LAST OF THE LOG DRIVES

The tide of empire, according to the old proverb, has been pushing its way westward for a good many years. Here and there it has left a short stretch of frontier behind, surrounded by modern complexity. But these spots are fast vanishing. Year by year they grow fewer. New York and Detroit are altogether too much for them.

The last of the great white pine log drives is now being finished in the upper peninsula of Michigan. Nearly 2,500,000 feet of logs are coming down the Hanistique river; when the drive is finished, lumbermen say Michigan will have seen the last of the really large-scale affairs of that kind.

Thus another lost bit of the old frontier inconspicuously preserved in as up-to-date a state as Michigan, passes on. For the old-time lumberjack and his log drives were things of the frontier, as far as Michigan was concerned, when Michigan was one vast wilderness, and they are coming to an end because that wilderness has vanished, giving way to farms, manufacturing towns, railroads, paved roads and golf courses.

It was 'way back in 1832 that Michigan's logging days started. Someone built a sawmill at Saginaw in that year, and from that moment the axes of the lumberjacks were constantly flashing and ringing. Gangs of men worked month after month, heaping tremendous piles of odorous new logs by the river bank; then in the spring, when melted snows gave the river added power, the logs were tumbled in and floated down to the mills—floated down with busy lumberjacks along to make the wild river behave itself, floated down to the tune of danger and hardships and endurance and death.

Epic stories came out of this strange, picturesque industry. Timber kings were made over night, hauling grotesque mansions in isolated mill towns. The lumberjack became famous—famous for his deeds of strength and courage, famous for his wild, uncontrollable sprees with which he celebrated the ending of each drive, famous for his fights and for the liquor he could drink.

And Michigan's forests disappeared. By 1900 the lower peninsula was about cleared. Ten years later the bulk of the big operations in the upper peninsula were finished. There are still logging camps there, to be sure; but the great days are ended. The Hanistique river is floating down its last big drive. After this the story will be just about closed.

America still produces timber, of course. But the big forests now are far to the west. The tide of empire is moving toward the setting sun, pushing the frontier ahead of it. What Oregon and Washington are now, Michigan was three decades ago—and what Michigan is now, Oregon and Washington will be in a few more years. The lumberjack, riding downstream on a shifting carpet of swaying logs is on his way to join the cowboy and the old-time tailor.

Dr. Vinci, Man of Science

The spiral spring hinge that shuts your screen door was invented by Leonardo da Vinci, the Fifteenth century painter, whose "La Belle Ferconderne" was the subject of an extended lawsuit. Leonardo's fame as a painter has obscured his reputation as an inventor and a trail blazer of science. Yet he stated scientific laws that four centuries of experiment have not altered and many of his simplest inventions have become part of our daily lives. He devised the wheelbarrow, the rotating smokestack that turns with the wind, and the flexible roller chain used on bicycle sprockets. Edwin W. Teale in Popular Science Monthly.

FIVE TYPES OF WOMEN SHOWN

Interesting Character Portrayal Feature of "The Squall" At Cliftona.

INSIDE 5—TYPES THEATRES

Five women of entirely different types are delineated in the First National picture "The Squall," showing at the Cliftona Theatre Wednesday and Thursday.

These characters are portrayed by Alice Joyce, Myrna Loy, Loretta Young, Zasu Pitts and Marcia Harris. Miss Joyce enacts the restrained and tender role of Maria Lajos, the wife and mother whose husband and son are almost taken from her by Nubi, the gypsy maid played by Myrna Loy, savage incorrigible girl-nomad who chances upon the Lajos household in the same manner that a squall crashes upon a peaceful countryside.

Loretta Young is the naive and sweet Irma, loving a college boy and believing that evil does not exist in the world; Zasu Pitts as Lena, the maid-servant, has given her simple heart in love to the man-servant. The fifth woman in the cast is Marcia Harris, who as Anna, depicts a human talking machine, constantly talking, gossiping and chattering wherever she goes. The balance of the cast includes Richard Tucker, Carroll Nye, Harry Cording, Knute Erickson, Nicholas Soussanin and George Hackathorne.

BENEFIT AGAIN TONIGHT

"His Lucky Day," a splendid comedy starring Reginald Denny, Otis Harlan and LeRayne Duval, is showing at the Grand theatre tonight under the auspices of the Business and Professional Women's club of Circleville. "His Lucky Day" shows Denny as a real estate man who has a hard time trying to find suitable neighbors for the father of the girl he loves or loses his job.

A Fox news reel is also on the program.

SCENIC EFFECTS GREAT

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, in arrangement with A. L. Erlanger, Charles Dillingham and F. Ziegfeld, Jr., offers the world's mightiest attraction at the Metropolitan theatre in the celebrated picture version of "Ben-Hur," to which all New York has crowded for many months and which equally delighted Chicago, Boston and Philadelphia in as many record-breaking runs. This wonderful picture cost $4,000,000, three years' time and the labors of 150,000 persons in Italy and California.

The details of General Lew Wallace's famous "Tale of the Christ" have been reverently followed. Not only that, the picture heightens the powerful melodramatic and love interest of the play, centering in the four romantic characters of Ben-Hur, Messala, Esther and Iras, enacted by Ramon Novarro, Francis X. Bushman, May McAvoy and Carmel Myers.

Stars Are to Blame

The word influenza has an astronomical origin, according to a writer in London Answers. It pertains one of the darkest guests at the origin of the disease—that of the stars, who blamed the influence of the stars for the September century epidemic.

We are still uncertain as to the cause of flu, though we no longer look for them in the stars. The uncertainty is natural enough, so baffling are some of the influenza epidemics. For instance, that of 1899 started at Vancouver in Central Asia, Greenland and Northwest Canada—places thousands of miles apart—and then spread all over the world.

Daphne by HAZEL LIVINGSTON

CHAPTER LXV.

At that moment Crystal's worldly possessions were at their lowest ebb, she had even sold some of her clothes to get a little ready money—but such as they were, she would have given them all for another chance at Ralph.

Gideon Cocklebur, from the prodigal spender, had turned into the cautious lover, over night. His wife—Crystal couldn't forgive her self for not having made sure about that sooner—returned unexpectedly from a two year's sojourn in Moscow. Instantly Cocklebur's whole manner changed. His little fiction about platonic affection for the beautiful little girl from the country vanished. His whole sale invitations to dinners and shows also stopped. There were several weeks when Crystal hardly saw him at all.

"Oh, if I only had someone to advise me!" she mourned, pacing back and forth in the narrow space of the bizarre studio apartment she had come to hate. "If only Mama was like other mothers! The right kind of a mother can do everything for a girl. You need background. If I had a decent background he wouldn't dare treat me like that! But when a man finds a girl all alone in town, without any people of her own, of course, he thinks he can do anything! It's all mama's fault. If she had managed right we'd be rich."

"We ought to be living on the orchard property yet, with house parties, and wonderful men visiting, and we could if she hadn't got fancies to squandering everything. Then I'd show them—I'd show them the kind of match I could make! But here, all by myself what chance have I got?"

What chance indeed, with a stack of bills a foot high, and collectors banging on the door at all hours?

She made it her business to see Mrs. Cocklebur, though it meant hours of patient waiting in the lobby of the hotel. At last she saw them together, fat Gideon looking yellow and more like a garden slug than ever, and a tall, very masculine looking woman with horn rimmed glasses, and commonplace shoes.

"It ought to be easy to get him to divorce that," she decided, and she patted her little fat hand, and gazed soulfully into his little eyes, while he told her how unhappy his married life had been, and how his wife, who was interested in nothing but politics and temperance, never understood him.

"That's why you mean so much to me, my dear," he said. "You know how I am, beauty loving. All for the nice things in life. One little even me with you, my dear, means more to me than I can tell you."

"But, darling, you never take me out any more."

"Why, only last night we had dinner."

"Yes, at that old chop house. I mean, not a fancy place like 'Nice Garden'."

"But, my dear, I couldn't compromise you by taking you to public places where we would be recognized."

"Aren't you afraid of compromising me by staying here then?" But she was so sure she could not get the best of him on an argument, and she couldn't let him to consider an "evening divorce."

"Some day, when I'm free," he would say, but it was always "some day"—never now.

She gathered that it was Mrs. Cocklebur who had the money, and was again holding the purse-strings, for since her return his generous gifts ceased. For once in her life Crystal was completely outwitted.

If it had been only Cocklebur it wouldn't have been so bad. But Avery Woodward was gone and even Ralph, who had seemed so safe, was slipping away.

"I'm unlucky, I am," she would tell herself, staring into the mirror, with gloomy, critical eyes. "It isn't my fault. What chance has a girl all alone, without any money or anything? If Mama hadn't had been so damn selfish, I might have had a chance."

"If she'd take my advice and get a good rooming house she might make good yet—but she won't."

That was another thing to worry about. Adelina's letters which no longer came on black bordered paper, were filled with accounts of conquests and beauty treatments.

"A certain realtor here admired me very much. Of course, being a prominent man, and me so recently widowed, he has not made any offer yet. He was wonderful to me at the Whist Tournament. I wore my pink crepe-backed satin, and had a paper curl and a special facial at the Wonder Beauty Salon. You ought to try food they put out."

Sometimes Crystal threw the letter into the wastebasket unread. Adelina's complacent faith in her ability to get another husband was sickening. "Imagine her—at her age. She ought to salt down her money, and get to work. She needn't think she can come and sponge on me when she's broke!"

There were even times—though they didn't come very often—when Crystal thought seriously of herself getting work. Just what she didn't know. Selling antiques in an art shop perhaps. Or some sort of stage work. . . . But it was all very indefinite, and difficult, and she never thought about it very long.

So it was a real surprise to her when the long-suffering apartment house manager told her she would have to pay or get out.

"Of course," she said. "I'll have it for you in a day or two. I've been a little short. But I have money coming."

He eyed her morosely. "You're two months behind, Miss Garroty. Rent is supposed to be paid in advance. I'll have to have it by tomorrow night or—"

"Or what?" she demanded coldly. The man twisted a diamond ring on his finger. He was really sorry for Crystal, but business is business. "Well, I can't keep anyone in here who can't pay," he said. "I could rent this place to-morrow for ten more than I'm getting."

It was quite a place for a young lady alone to keep up, or, why don't you move, and get a less expensive place?"

A less expensive place? Crystal, seething over the idea long after he had gone. What did he take her for? Did he think she would live in one of those two by four holes with a wall bed and a kitchenette?

She went back to the mirror, and began to make up. Slowly, carefully, stopping every few minutes to scrutinize the results. Her profile vaguely worried her. . . . that fulness under the chin. . . . not a double chin, of course. . . . "I'll have to get an astringent," she decided. "What was that tissue cream Mama said was good?"

Her spirits rose as she darkened her long blond lashes, and red-dened the cupid-bow of her mouth. The rent was forgotten. "A pretty girl doesn't have to worry," she thought. "Something will turn up."

BUSY DAYS AHEAD

The Ohio State Fair Grounds present a busy scene these days. Buildings are being roofed, repairs made, big water-mains are being laid, and comfort stations erected. Director Perry L. Green and Assistant Director C. E. Rowland are pursuing a program of restoring the grounds and buildings to safe, sanitary and attractive appearance, rather than using the appropriation for new buildings. Penitentiary prisoners are being used in the work wherever possible. Every effort is to be used during the big annual gathering, August 26-31, to overcome disagreeable features, and to promote comfort and convenience, say the managers. One such project is to divert traffic from certain of the main highways to the north gates of the grounds, to reduce the congestion at the main gates. This is to be done by a system of markers along Columbus streets, in cooperation with the city authorities. A notable list of 12 special attractions have been contracted. There are to be seven bands, headed by the great recording and broadcasting Armco Band of Middletown, and the ALL-OHIO Boys' band, 300 strong, recruited from all the counties of the state. TWO ACTIONS FOR MONEY ARE FILED

Two suits for money have been filed in Common Pleas court the past few days. One of these was brought by Edith B. Ruble of Lancaster against Edward Wolfey of Lancaster and Charles C. Mattox of Adelphi. The plaintiff claims that $1000 is due her on a promissory note which was given in January, 1928. Selbaugh and Selbaugh are attorneys for the plaintiff.

Another money suit has been brought by the Tri-State Refining Co., of Cleveland, against T. A. Boor, who operates the Boor Oil Co. of Ashville. The petition says that the defendant owes the plaintiff the sum of $2219.14. C. P. H. Mitchell has been appointed receiver for the Boor Oil Co.

POPE BANS MOVIES OF VATICAN EXIT

VATICAN CITY, July 24—(INS)—Pope Pius XI has forbidden moving picture cameramen to make pictures of his historic exit from the vatican on Thursday evening.

Despite the desire in some quarters for a photographic record of this event to be handed down to posterity, the pontiff declined to permit the making of pictures.

It was stated that the pope did not wish to have the event shown in performances with worldly shows nor give opportunity to use it to attract Catholics to the movies.

The Vatican requested the Italian government to prevent filming of the scenes from the Italian side of the Vatican city frontier.

THREE AIRPORTS OF ENTRY ESTABLISHED

WASHINGTON, July 24—(INS)—The government took steps today to facilitate airplane traffic between the United States and Canada by two more permanent and one temporary aerial ports of entry along the border.

Newport, Vt., and Grosse Isle, Mich., near Detroit, were designated as permanent airports of entry, and the Ford airport at Detroit, was given temporary designation, pending the completion of the municipal airport at Detroit.

With airports of entry already established at Buffalo, Albany, St. Paul and Seattle, it is now expected that aerial traffic between the two countries will be greatly accelerated. Customs inspectors and immigration officials will be stationed at the new fields.

BIBLE SELLER'S BODY IS FOUND

LANCASTER, July 24—(INS)—Laying face downward in the shallow water of the Hocking river the lifeless body of George L. Shaw, 69, a Bible salesman, was found today. There were cuts on the body near the throat.

Coroner W. H. Eck had not determined whether death was accidental or whether Shaw committed suicide.
